

Five reasons why a regime change in Iran is also good for Europe

1. Improved security

A democratic Iran contributes to regional stability, the destruction fantasies related to Israel would finally be put to an end and the construction of a nuclear bomb would be off the table.

2. Economic advantages

An open Iran could offer new markets for European companies and strengthen bilateral trade.

3. Energy supply

With extensive oil and gas reserves, a democratic Iran could contribute to Europe's energy security.

4. Promotion of human rights

A democratic Iran would respect human rights, which is in line with European values.

5. Fight against terrorism

A democratic Iran could be a stronger and more reliable partner in the fight against terrorism and organized crime, and the financing of terrorist organizations would end.

Bonus

People who needed asylum due to political persecution can finally return to their home country to friends and family.

Five reasons why the nuclear agreement with Iran (JCPOA) should be terminated once and for all

1. Lack of transparency

Iran has never been fully transparent about its nuclear program despite the JCPOA. Deviations were excused as "oversights".

2. Ignoring human rights violations

The JCPOA does not hold Iran accountable for its human rights violations and suppression of freedom of expression.

3. Trust problem

The Mullah regime has demonstrably failed to comply with the JCPOA on several occasions and has now enriched uranium to over 80%. For the production of nuclear energy, 6% is sufficient.

4. Time limit

The agreement contains so-called "sunset clauses", i.e. the restrictions will be lifted after a certain period of time - in some cases already at the end of this year.

5. Exclusion of other activities

Other problematic activities, such as the missile program and support for terrorism, are not sufficiently addressed or prevented in the agreement.

Bonus

With sanctions removed, the regime will have more resources to fund terrorist organizations and the brutal repression of Iran's own people.
